

> >

Quick Links

Blog -

Category -

Archives

Browse archives by date

Calendar

Sun Mon Tue Wed Thu Fri Sat

Statistics

Total entries in this blog:

Total entries in this category: 6

Published On: Jan 16, 2004

03:15 PM

Powered by

iBlog

Archiving and sharing of Brumalia songs

I've had a couple of questions about archiving and sharing the Brumalian recordings. You already know that the Residents do not support illegal downloading, P2P sharing, and mp3 trading without the permission of the artist. And I don't think anybody would have to think too hard to realize that we could archive and share these songs at Residents.com if that was what we wanted to do.

Actually though, it isn't what we want to do. The Brumalian recordings were part of a fun event that took place in real time over 12 days. They are not intended to be downloaded at once and listened to whenever someone feels like it. It has to happen during the 12 days of Brumalia, and Brumalia comes but once a year.

The people who visit our blog DESERVE special treatment without the rest of the world who missed this (and will soon miss our exciting future events) acting like they are being treated poorly. Brumalian songs were here for two weeks. No one who really cares would go two weeks without checking the blog, right?

To the people who missed Brumalia, I suggest you mark your calendars now.... December 25 is when it all starts.

And to the people who never missed a Brumalian day, you are invited to share your songs with people you love.

Posted: Fri - January 16, 2004 at 03:03 PM
